Special Event Wednesday, June 13

Social-Emotional Learning is essential to school safety and academic success. Making this instruction central to teaching will provide students and staff with valuable tools for living in the ever-changing world around us, and equip them with skills to cultivate quality relationships.

Frida Rundell, Ph.D., is a founding IIRP faculty member. A committed practitioner, she brings extensive experience in Narrative and Solution-Focused Therapies, Life-Space Crisis Intervention and the Circle of Courage to the IIRP, supporting students in mastering restorative responses. Dr. Rundell works directly with young people and their families in a community-based alternative-to-placement for delinquent youth, an IIRP model program. She has also worked in another IIRP-model program, a pilot for students expelled from the local school district. She will share her expertise to engage participants in self-compassion as a way to care for those we teach.

Summer Institute Schedule

❖ What is Restorative Discipline?

It is a unique approach to bullying prevention that is built on the belief in the dignity of the human person. By fostering personal understanding and practice of character through timeless teaching on virtue, we can more fully experience personal growth, and in turn, integrate kindness in our interactions with those around us. When harmful behavior occurs, restorative practices enable all parties to repair relationships and make things as right as possible.

❖ How Do You Know Restorative Discipline is Effective?

Two significant outcomes in this work are:

1. Decrease anti-social behaviors
2. Increase in virtue and character development

Many existing programs address misbehavior without exploring the needs of the whole child for all parties involved in harmful behavior. Traditional discipline is generally punitive. The strategies provided in the RD training, once implemented, are evaluated by surveys and tracking behaviors to determine the effectiveness in achieving its goals.

❖ What Preparations Do I Need to Make?

Reflect with others in your school community. Go to the website to read about roles/responsibilities and review the checklist for implementation. Select staff and parents who share your enthusiasm for maintaining a positive school climate and form a school team. Register your team to attend the upcoming Summer Institute for training. We recommend the Institute for a minimum of three adults: an administrator and at least two teachers. The most successful teams train their entire staff.

❖ Why Should Our School Register a "Team?"

Each team member can be trained for specific roles. This is a collaborative process that values every person's contribution to a peaceful, safe, and productive learning environment. Parents can be trained in order to implement it at home, providing consistency in the approach to solving conflicts and cultivating character and virtue.

Here's what 2017 Summer Institute participants had to say...

"Excellent all around. Very valuable use of time and money. Inspirational and encouraging."

"I really enjoyed the week and especially meeting new people. I think sitting at a table with teachers who are veterans at using this program was a most effective way to really understand how the program works."

"I loved the way we could be on different levels for where we are in our understanding and our training needs."
